Robin Phillips qualified in medicine in London in 1975 and became a Consultant Surgeon at St Mark’s Hospital in 1987, where he has been Chairman of Surgery, Dean of the St Mark’s Academic Institute, and from 2006 Clinical Director. He is Professor of Colorectal Surgery in Imperial College, London. Robin has had a broad interest in many aspects of colorectal surgery and has published widely in the field. Perhaps his largest contributions have been in the fields of Familial Adenomatous Polyposis (FAP) and in anal and recto-vaginal fistula.
